Burnaby Hotels Downtown - It takes many well trained personnel to run a completely operational hotel. There are many job opportunities and jobs in the hotel industry, which are necessary to guarantee smooth operations. For example, highest on the career ladder is usually hotel managers. They have the numerous responsibilities of managing personnel and facilities. The hotel manager would delegate responsibilities from everyone such as maintenance crews to front office employees. Wait staff, reservation specialists, cleaning staff and management, lifeguards, accountants, chefs, valet parking attendants, lawyers and guest services employees are some of the main jobs within the industry.

In certain hotels, specific activities such as bartenders, games dealers and events coordinators might need the filling of other hotel industry jobs. Hotels which have adjoined casinos would have security personnel to monitor activities in the hotel and the casino and also employ many dealers to attend to table games. They will also have cashiers on hand who will particularly manage the cash which enters and leaves the casino area.

The event planner working at a hotel is normally responsible for catering needs and parking services. They would also be responsible for preparing convention areas and for hosting large parties like weddings and family reunions. The event planners focus on attending to the particular needs of the event and fulfilling the customer's wishes. Hotels that are very big or have extensive grounds or convention centers will normally employ one or more events coordinators to handle certain functions.

The majority of hotel industry jobs focus on maintenance and cleanliness. Like for instance, a cleaning staff would attend to each room daily or prior to a new customer renting it. Cleaning crews are responsible for ensuring the common areas such as the lobbies, lounges, exercise rooms and bars are neat and stocked as well as the hotel rooms themselves.

Another important service is the laundry services that are often done on-site. Sometimes hotels would have their linens shipped out to be cleaned and returned to the hotel. Maintenance workers have the task of keeping all of the facilities in proper working order. If particular elements of the facility need repair or break down, a maintenance staff will handle it. Similarly, groundskeepers will tend to the hotel grounds and make certain that the grass and plants and overall landscape is presentable to patrons.

There are a lot of hotel industry jobs that focus on restaurant and bar management. Among the key staff comprise: sous chefs, bartenders, servers, chefs, maitre d's, dishwashers and busboys. Bar backs are employees who help maintain a bar area, mostly throughout busier hours. They help to make sure liquor bottles are full and ready for use by the bartender and that the glassware is kept clean.
