

Downtown Burnaby Hotels

Downtown Burnaby Hotels - A hotel is a place which offers paid accommodation on a temporary basis. The term hotel is derived from the French hotel, and this is derived from "hote" meaning host. This referred to a French kind of a townhouse or any other kind of building that often saw visitors, as opposed to a place offering accommodation. In the French language, the term hotel currently has the same meaning as the English term, and "hotel particulier" is utilized for the old meaning.

Originally the French spelling, complete with the circumflex, was also utilized in English but this is rare practice at present. The circumflex replaces the "s" found in the prior hostel spelling. Eventually, the word "hostel" took on a new and closely related meaning. Grammatically speaking, hotels generally take the definite article - thus "The Astoria Hotel" or "the Astoria."

A hotel traditionally represented basic lodging providing a room, a small table, a bed, a washstand, and a cupboard. The modern and extravagant facilities nowadays of course provide climate control or air-conditioning as well as en-suite bathrooms.

These days, hotels have added several additional features like a phone, an alarm clock, a mini-bar with drinks and snacks, often a coffee maker and a safe. Several hotel rooms are luxurious and can provide bathrobes and slippers, a pillow menu, Jacuzzi bathtubs and twin sink vanities. Bigger hotels might have additional features like a pool, a fitness center, a hot tub or waterslide, childcare, social function services, conference facilities and a business center.

Hotel rooms are traditionally numbered, although smaller hotels and B&Bs could be named. Meals are sometimes included within the accommodation. In the UK, a hotel is required legally to serve drinks and food to all customers in certain hours which are stated. On the other hand, in Japan, capsule hotels are plenty and these unique places provide a less amount of room space and communal facilities.

Hotels are available in various function, sizes and cost. The major hospitality companies which operate hotels and nearly all hotels have set particular industry standard to be able to classify hotel types. Amongst the general categories comprise the following: Resort hotels, and Conference hotels, both usually contain full-sized luxury facilities with full amenities and complete service accommodations. Boutique hotels and Historic Inns usually have luxury facilities, of varying size in unique or intimate settings. These hotels often have full service accommodations such as Extended Stay, Destination Club, Select Service, Timeshare and Limited Service.
